

“We appreciate the vital support that the Lab contributes to the community.”

—Regional Community Leader

Los Alamos National Laboratory’s Community Programs Office (CPO) manages a $3 million per year investment to address community needs. This funding is part of Los Alamos National Security, LLC’s (the Lab’s manager) seven-year Community Commitment Plan for regional education, economic development, and community giving.

To carry out this work, CPO partners with the Los Alamos National Laboratory Foundation for education, the Regional Development Corporation for economic development, and the regional United Way organizations for community giving.

Education

Los Alamos National Security (LANS) invests more than $1 million each year to enhance regional educational opportunities in science, technology, engineering, and math (STEM) education.

Education Focus Areas

Our education commitments address four focus areas:

- Workforce Development
- Student Internships
- Teacher and Faculty Professional Development
- Public Understanding of Science

As a result of these efforts, in 2010 more than 1,100 students interned at the Lab, our employees gave more than 3,000 hours to advance more than 80 local science and technology programs and helped award more than $400,000 in scholarships to Northern New Mexico students.

The Bradbury Science Museum provides a window into the Lab and last year hosted more than 82,000 people and visited more than 2,200 students at their schools.

Economic Development

Economic development plays a significant role in strengthening communities. We partner with industry, government, universities, and local economic development and business organizations to manage a $1 million annual investment to promote a strong, vibrant, local community.
